Poop Help Sheet

Normal Poops

Obviously there are many different types of 'normal' poop, these are just some examples of what 'normal' can be

Cecal – expect to see these every 10 poops or so

Abnormal Poops – Here are a few examples of poop that may require a vets attention

The hen who produced this was 25 weeks old. She went off her food and ate little she became underweight. She held her tail down and was tired. She may have had worms and/or egg peritonitis.

Coccidiosis produces blood in faeces.

The hen who produced this specimen was an older bird who became very thirsty. She is producing a large amount of watery urates the cause of which is unknown, but could possibly be a kidney problem.

Sick Chook

Worms

Watery droppings can be produced by hens which are too hot. It can be a way for them to cool down by drinking a lot and losing some of their heat in frequent wet droppings. It can also be a sign that the hens are not eating enough too.
